SILVER QUESTION. ing letter of the silver question from an exto gather the opinions of the best authorities as to the course to be paraued with a view to arrest to fall in the value of silver, we find that the perplexity increases in proportion to the depreciation of the metal. When experts, who laro avidently sorely distressed by the restless condition of the silver market, are unable to lagree upon a solution of the difficulty which they can recommend and demonstrate to the world as practicable, our own Government may be held blameless for not taking any steps in the matter. The difficulty in the way of adopting the suggestion with which our correspondent's letter winds up seems to be that the English Government would simply place itself in the position from which the German Government istrying to extricate itself, with, moreover, no certainty that the joint efforts of the two to arrest the decline in the value of the metal and cause a natural demand to spring up would succeed in bringing about those results :--The continued and marked depreciation in silver and the consequent full in the London and Chinese exchanges demand constant attention. The lalesez aller policy which appears to obtain may occasion irremediable injury to our Eastern trade. You state that the Committee will make no recommendation; therefore ment for permission to cultivate the waste plain | the matter will be left to take its course until a Teganuma under the jurisdiction of the ory land and deep from our Eastern traders will awaken our Government to the dangers arising from its lethargy. To remedy the depreciation of silver three courses have been advocated-first, the bimetallic currency; secondly, the suspension or limitation of silver coinage in India; thirdly, a Convention with Germany, so that her silver may not be pressed upon a weak market. The first will not obtain favour, because highly civilized nations will not frequent. Possibly an increase of silver token ourrency might be advantageous, and would probably be well received, especially in Ireland. and Scotland, where little gold circulates. The second course, -namely, the suspension or limitation of coinage in India—is not advisable, owing to the dangerous consequences which would ensue. Were that course adopted silver would immediately fall considerably; China would be the only important outlet; the cxof silver, and the Chinese trade be seriously affected. Munchester goods would, in the eyes of Chinamen, rise considerably and the consamption diminish; so also opium, upon which trade the prosperity of India mainly depends. The price of silk then would decline still further place for the production of silk. But many But there is a still greater danger. Vires acquirit cundo. " M. de Warren here institutes a compurison between the forces of England and Russia, taking the Almanach de Gotha for his guide. According to official statistics for the years 1876 the Russian army can be raised in war time to 1,387,000 fighting men, with 213,200 horses, and 1.968 pieces of artillery. This is exclusing of a force of 200,000 men, 10,000 horses, and 415 field pieces for the army of Russian Asia,

M. de Warren, however, asserts that out of 171 reserve battalions set down as containing an aggregate of 170,700 men, 164 battalions exist as yet solely on paper. The number of the "local troops" (274,900) he also considers greatly exaggerated. On the whole, M., de-Warshathinks that we cannot admit the effective cital of the whole Russian army, both in Europe and Asia, in time of war to be more than 1,200,000 men. The Imperial navy coneists of 27 ironalade (of which 4 are in construction), and 190 other ships, of which 66 are transports and 30 are described as "unarmed steamors" ("vapeurs non-armés"). This navy is manued by 25,500 sailors, who are officered by 80 admirals, 1,307 officers of inferior grades, and 220 officers of marine artillory. Thus hand, needed recruiting, it would have no difficulty in attracting a sufficient number of our fighting force, according to M. de Warren, would reach the respectable figure of 1,225,590
